

Buying Green in Maplewood

- <http://stlouisgreen.com/companies-products/find>
Some of the simplest ways to promote a healthy earth are to change your purchasing choices to support companies that value sustainable practices. St. Louis Green makes this process easy; providing users with a simple search engine for finding “green” St. Louis companies.
- <http://schlafly.com/bottleworks/>
Schlafly’s has made sustainability a central tenet of their philosophy as a brewery and restaurant. Check out the Bottleworks to get delicious, locally sourced food. Also, Bottleworks routinely offers their event rooms to environmental organizations hosting events; check the Schlafly website to see the full schedule of current events on offer.
- <http://www.maplewoodbicycle.com/>
Riding a bike is a great way to live a healthy and environmentally friendly lifestyle. Go to Maplewood Bicycle to get a new bike, or get an old bike serviced, so that you can hit the streets in style.
- <http://www.foundationgrounds.com/Default.aspx>
Grab a fair trade coffee on the way to work and stay awake while staying green! As it says on their website, Foundation Grounds “has an eye on keeping you, the community and the planet healthy.”
- <http://www.adg-stl.com/>
The Architectural Design Guild is a Maplewood based architectural firm which will take on a wide variety of jobs and operates with sustainability as one of their primary guiding principles. ADG owner Barry Greenberg also serves on Maplewood’s city council.
- <http://www.hellmuth-bicknese.com/>
Hellmuth and Bicknese is a Maplewood based full-service architectural firm which focuses on “green” building and encouraging sustainable communities. Sustainability commission member Ralph Bicknese is one of the partners of Hellmuth and Bicknese.